Parent Communication Partner Training

A few words from our Founder, Reece Blankenship:

“ReClif is a community that understands and connects to autistics. It is a place where those who are working to establish their own lives and forging their own paths can grow and achieve new goals with confidence. Together, I want us to change the conversations surrounding autism.

My greatest blessing is to be able to help others like myself grow to live a more purposeful life. As a founding member of the Every Voice Matters community in Atlanta, I have been amazed to watch our community of spellers grow to be one of the largest in the United States, dare I say even the World?!?! Specifically for non-speakers, garnering the ability to connect brain and body, and being able to coordinate the movements needed to spell our desires is quite frankly life changing. I am thrilled that at ReClif, we have created a place where that occurs often.

The importance of ReClif goes way beyond what I can explain in a paragraph. My mission is to change the conversation surrounding autism by empowering, accepting, supporting, and advocating for myself and others on the spectrum. Since 2017, I have been honored by amazing encouragement, humbled by support from friends near and far, and hungry to keep ReClif on an upward trajectory.”

Enduring 19 years unable to communicate, Reece imagined an unequalled and impelling center that would accept and connect autistics with others through collaboration and understanding. His greatest desire was to help others like himself grow to achieve their highest potential.

It has always been Reece’s desire to encourage family interaction through Spelling. At ReClif, we will work on helping family members learn the best-practice procedures to “get on the boards” with your child. Coaching the parent as they begin the journey to communication with their child is a particular joy for Lou and Joan who have traversed this road with their own sons and families.

Ask us because we are here to help!
